“ Nimble Fingers

A Tribute to Aline Lovette Cunningham

Her fingers made her living, as she made doll clothes and knitted all day.

Sometime she did not feel like getting out of bed but she had to anyway.

Tiny frills and ruffles for American Girl Dolls continually occupied her time.

And if she got distracted in anyway, she'd return to it right in rhyme.

Her home was filled with thread, lace and boxes of odds and ends.

“Now, I need you to save me some coupons,” she said to all her friends.

Like she really need more stuff to fill every corner of her house!

She had so much material stored back – a good place to hide a mouse!

“Tally Ho to the craft shows” is what she shouted in December every year.

“I’ve worked hard with my stitching and knitting and now it’s finally here!”

And she would do all of her setting up again to sell all her crafts and wares.

And because she was bound and determined to sell out, she seemed to have no care.

Alline Lovette Cunningham - nimble fingers, which work almost all the day.

And even when she felt all of her aches and pains, "Can't let that get in my way."

There was work to be done 365 days a year, so she could be ready for the shows.

Even though she went on vacation, she took some work-she had to-everyone knows..

As her sewing machine buzzed, "Hand me more thread; another pattern, or get out!"

"If you can't help me get my job done, go away!" she said with a shout.

When a deadline was rapidly approaching, she felt the panic for her job to complete.

And if she was the least bit frazzled, she'd tell you where to take a seat!

You'd think she had enough to do and it would be time for her to rest.

But even through all the pressures Alline was always at her best!

Through it all she gave God the glory for getting her through each day.

And she knew that one day she'd rejoice as she walked in that Heavenly Way.

*****

This was originally written in 2001, in the present tense. However,

on August 14, 2008,

I changed it to the past tense. Aline went home to be with the Lord on August 19, 2008.
