“ I grew up with Kerry and I was always touched by his sincerity and his loyalty to his friends. Many decades ago when I was just learning to play guitar, he would listen as I botched chords and misplaced notes and would cheer me on and prod me to keep going, to keep trying. His encouragement was a beautiful thing to me at that time. He believed in me and that motivated me in such a positive way. He made me feel like a rock star.

Kerry and I reconnected after my son Dakota passed away a few years ago. It was a beautiful reconnection for me. His kindness and his sense of humor showed up in my Facebook inbox several times a week and hearing from him was always a welcome break from the day-to-day ugliness that tends surrounds us currently. I received a note from him just two days before he died so his passing was truly a shock to me.

I will miss our interactions. I will miss our music discussions. I will miss getting silly cartoons that made me laugh. But I also know that as sad as we all are, he is happily holding hands with his wife Leeann and they are rejoicing in the eternity that they now share. And they finally get to share it together.

Bless you, Kerry. Thank you for cheering for me WAY before anyone else did. I love you, my friend.
