“ My Mother

There are many remarkable things to say about our Mother. I guess I really didn't know her resolve until after our Father died when I was 14. Our Mom had to begin working to support us. And she began night school to make up for the years of school she missed when she was younger.

She began working at North Greenville college in the kitchen making and serving meals for the students. Later, she worked as a seamstress for years until she reached retirement age.

But these are not the things that defined our Mother. She still made the time to cook, clean, and as most mothers do, give us advice. And today, at least for me, it is her advice that I can still hear in my head.

At first, I listened to and used maybe 20 percent of Mom's advice, but as I aged, I learned that her advice grew to more like 80 percent that I could rely on. Go figure, Mom's life experience became something I could always rely on.

And now, as I sit and write these memories, my own dementia has robbed me of my yesterday's past. I still have her life experiences and her cherished love to guide me.

I will miss you Mom. You will always be in my heart where your love will live forever.
